Mediterranean Grill

The Mediterranean Grill opened for business on 5 January 2004. The restaurant features colorful versions of a blue ceiling and facades to create an outdoor Mediterranean alley atmosphere showcasing food from the countries that coast the Mediterranean Sea. The entrees are updated on a regular basis to reflect the most appropriate for the season. The food is prepared from the freshest ingredients to your satisfaction under our chef's meticulous attention to each presented plate. Our friendly staff will recommend the wine and beer most appropriate for your visit and cater to your every need.

The Food

Mediterranean food, by most accounts, is most sensuous. By virtue of its earthiness, the finest and freshest ingredients are prepared from scratch. To us, the real beauty is in the food's content and flavor, which comes from thousands of years of understanding its needs and wants and what suits the best to savor the taste of those who order the food.

Mediterranean food spans Turkey in the North East and Egypt in the South East and continues with those countries lapping the Mediterranean Sea ending in Spain and Morocco.

Olive oil is the best-known ingredient of the Mediterranean diet. "Extra Virgin" olive oil is used mainly in fresh salads and "Pure" olive oil is used for the cooked entrees.

Herbs grow wild in the mountains and on the seashores. Oregano, laurel, thyme, dill and basil are the classical Mediterranean herbs. Their intense aromas are a wonderful adjunct to a diet which fresh or lightly grilled ingredients play such a major part. Cumin, pepper, turmeric, cinnamon and coriander dominate North African cooking, together with caraway and chilies. In the Eastern Mediterranean, mint, parsley, sesame and rose-pedals are extensively used. Finally, Mediterranean garlic comes in many varieties, and is used in practically every dish. A pinch of saffron is used to give an extraordinary flavor and color to risotto or paella.

The Meal

The perfect Mediterranean meal is a sensuous experience equaled by none. From the moment the eye catches the food and matches it to its surroundings, until the moment the smell senses are activated by the fresh taste of the meal, the end result is to be savored by our guests.

The Procedure

In Mediterranean regions, mealtime is a definite family event. It all starts with gathering around the table with some piping hot flat bread, lavosh and/or focaccia bread and a lot of love. Those gathered around would break the bread and pass it around, each dipping into their preferred territory of the masatray of the day (appetizer tray). After there has been sufficient time to consume and appreciate the appetizer course, some wine is used to prime the taste buds for the next encounter in order. Meanwhile, the entrée plates are being meticulously prepared.

The Bread

Our thoughts reside with what you, our guest, receive when you visit us. Our flat, lavosh and focaccia breads start with dough that is mixed and kneaded every morning in house. Then it is baked in the Woodstone oven and served piping hot. This is our way of connecting the food to the earth that grows it, back to the people who live on its generous givings.

The Appetizers

The food we serve comes from thousands of years of arduous preparation aimed to understand natural food preservation. Grape leaves, for example, used to be picked in the middle of the season, when pH-level was suited to the taste of the filling content (first press olive oil and lemon mix). Back then, the leaves would be individually cleaned and stacked in saltwater to preserve them. Nowadays, the tradition continues with each leaf being wrapped with the home-made mix that savors the taste and reminds our guests of how the food and the earth that grows it are still naturally connected.

The Desserts

From phyllo-dough-based pastry (Baklava) to an Italian tiramisu, the Mediterranean meal is only complete once the sweet tooth craving has been satisfied.
